My initial goal is to complete a Google Doodle, highlighting the history of Northeastern University. The page at first glance will say “Welcome to Northeastern Learn about the Pack”. The “Northeastern” will make up the doodle. It will be a series of images of letters laid out horizontally to spell the university name. The animation will be for each letter and will slide the letter away to reveal either an old or new image of the University. Clicking on “Learn about the Pack” will take users to a page describing a brief history of the university.

However, after reading the specifications of the assignment, and realizing the goal was to highlight a technological item or a revolution or organic movement, I chose to redirect my project to highlight Rail Fans. I learned of Rail Fans at my time at Co-op at the Commuter Rail. Their passion for rail is fascinating and has become an international phenomenon.
